

adshg.org.uk* website

(also available via <http://www.addisonsdisease.org.uk>)

The website is on-line presence of the UK Addison's Disease Self Help Group (ADSHG). It was established in August 2002 by Katherine White and Nick Willson and has the following aims:

- To provide people diagnosed with Addison's disease with clear, professional, positive medical and educational information to help them learn more about their condition.
- To help members of the ADSHG communicate and connect together to share information, experiences and get answers to their questions.
- To provide a regular monthly publishing medium for information and articles drawn from the ADSHG Newsletter, our web editorial team and provided via the ADSHG Research and Development Fund (R&P Fund).

Who contributes to the website?

All members of the ADSHG are invited to submit material or help with technical aspects of the website. Two teams of people edit, maintain and contribute to the website and you are invited to join one of them if you wish to help.

Web Editorial Team: Sarah J. Baker, Deana Kenward, Katherine White

Web Technical Team: Nick Willson

Funding

The website costs are funded via members' subscriptions to the ADSHG and where appropriate the ADSHG R&P Fund, when publishing its specific materials. Funding through advertising, endorsement or sponsorship is being avoided to keep the site impartial and free from commercial constraints.

How is the website governed?

The website will be governed by the website steering group, comprising of members from the ADSHG committee, the website teams and a medical advisor from the ADSHG R&P fund. A web charter (code of conduct) is being prepared by the steering group to assist the website teams in running the site.
